The prosecutor thought he only went down the corner for a lucifer, and when he came back he found Clare had taken shelter from the wind while he struck a light. Smith then

An extraordinary fact in connection with the British Volunteers is mentioned by a London paper. Attention having for some time past been directed to the serious dearth of officers in the Volunteer force, statistics on three counties alone which respectively furnish the largest number of men to the organization—namely, Lancashire, Middlesex, and Yorkshire—the number of officers short of the establishment has now reached the high total of 448. Matters in this respect are not so bad in the metropolis as in the two northern counties, Middlesex being only 50 short, as compared with 234 in Lancashire and 105 in Yorkshire.

By 8 o'clock the hall was crowded, and among the assemblage of ladies and gentlemen were several clergymen. The trustees, the Rev. William Kelly, S. Duncan McInnes be relieved of the duty of his office as clerk, and that the Rev. Isaac McKay, of this congregation, be appointed to succeed him." The votes were passed without opposition. The Rev. Stewart resuming the chair thanked the synod for the honor of appointing him moderator. Mr. McKay on accepting the office of clerk said that the appointment was not one of pleasure, but that he should endeavor to discharge his duties with all fidelity. A committee on bills and overtures was named by the moderator. The synod resolved to be in session on the 10th inst. at 10 a.m. and there to be the other from 6:30 p.m. till 9:30 p.m. The synod then adjourned to meet at 10 a.m. next day.

At the next synod met at 10 a.m., and there were present all the elders, Messrs. Law, W. S. Donald, J. Macdonald, Two elders, Messrs. Law and Murray, were also present. Lovers of marmalade will be interested to know that the marmalade man has been established in Philadelphia. An enterprising Italian in this city has opened a factory, and employs a large number of men in the manufacture of the fruit. The factory is run from the gutters, and carrying them to the factory, and the marmalade is then made. the people to have full local option, depend upon that with a view to by directing their representatives, in making laws, to take care of the rights of the majority and minorities must submit. It is just as you remark—Repeal the cause and there will be no effect left to cure; but let it be done constitutionally.

EDWARD J. H. KNAPP

Wentworth-court, February 2.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Referring to the remarks in your Monday's I beg permission to say that there is no error in the statement that local option is not a subject for consideration by the British Government. That the members of the Cabinet voted for Sir Wilfrid Lawson's motion, in support of which people are now protesting, is a fact, but the best interests of the nation urgently require some competent measure of legislation, by which, in accordance with the law already passed, and re-affirmed by the House, a legal power of training, the sale of intoxicating liquors for the sale of intoxicating liquors may be placed in the hands of the persons most deeply interested and able to manage the business, and to the benefit of the public. Ayes: 284; noes, 177; majority, 87.

It will be observed the resolution declared the right of local option to be a subject for consideration by the removal of licenses. Sir William Harcourt, the Secretary in his speech, said that the principle is not a subject for consideration by the Government, and this he differs from the main body of the W. T. supporters, who wisely desire a local plebiscite. Could it be, the people elect men favourable to a large measure in the number of licenses, and the Government has power to deal with the selectors. The vital point is that the so-called Sir Wilfrid, that the right of local option is a subject for consideration by the Government, and his chief followers contended, Sir, it is a

THE STATE OF RUSSIA.—The Paris correspondent of the Times writes on December 23: "I am sure that every body must have been struck by the silence observed respecting Russia. Newspapers with the exception of those devoted to the state of the country, the persecution of the Jews and the financial and industrial questions, all at once became mute. The telegraphic agencies nor the press have received anything. The Neue York Herald (which, however, is not published in Russia) from time to time, furnish semi-official notes on the state of the country. The Russian Imperial Power, one might fancy Russia to be more plunged than ever in the famous retirement maintained by the tsar since the 10th after the Crimean war. Yet nothing is changed. Russia is still the same violent and recalcitrant. But even, as far as the authorities are concerned, they do not receive invitations to avoid discussing specified questions. Russia, however, has not been disarmed, but contented with the same armaments as before. She is formerly exempt from contagion, has been completely the last few. Mikhail trials have shown among the people a tendency to the army, and these of the rank. Among the last batch sentenced to death for sedition to Nihilism was a lieutenant. Colonel Komarov, formerly Minister of Education, and the Interior, who, as a member of the Imperial Family, Emperor, is chiefly engaged in the discovery and punishment of Nihilists; but as that is no necessary part of Nihilism."

upon another. Nor was it clear a second trial that either side exactly what was to be done, or was done. The most hopeful conclusion that the majority voted and shouted at the resolution, and knew what they about. But it is not certain that so may be said with truth. Perhaps, and circumstances, it does not matter much.

The second resolution, charging the Imperial Government with apathy and concern, embodied a truism. But the question, What practical end was to be by uttering it at such a time? only exception to be taken to Sir J. PARKES's speech, which showed both moderation of tone, was that it waste of energy to make it amidst the conditions of the Anti-Mall Congress, relative to this matter, says—"The question of colonists is not with Germany, but England, and they do well to be so."

What we have to see to is that anger is not wasted in rhetoric converted into the motive force of a practical policy." Exactly so; mere displays of galvanic anger and chimerical rhetoric (neither of which ever, can be laid to the last-named charge) are particularly out of place at the present moment. The Imperial Government has certainly shown what looks much apathy and unconcern in this business besides that, a lamentable want of foresight and capacity. But was it not declared of in the House of Commons, almost on the Franco-Prussian war, that there was a cloud upon the political horizon? proceeding to the pointless work of so-called Imperial Government, and whether there has been any default of side, and whether there is anything proper to be done now to clear away present difficulties and provide against future danger.

Knowing the peculiar troubles and necessities of the Imperial Government would have been in the past, as it is sound policy to recognise them and accordingly. When, years ago, this urged the annexation of New Guinea to the Imperial Government, it was cast as set forth that it was a matter of Imperial concern. But matters of Imperial concern are matters for Imperial decision, and when the Imperial authorities were opposed to the extension of Empire because it would involve much trouble and also increased expense, it was good tactics for colonists to recommend annexation in their own interest, to be full to indicate that they did not wish to bear any of the cost. And so now, which have abundant ground for dissatisfaction to the Imperial Government for the harsh spirit and want of foresight and capacity displayed in its treatment of the financial affairs of the New Guinea business, injure our own cause, and supply Lord with fresh excuses for delay; and in doing anything to suggest that with money question is of serious moment, want to influence the English Government. Hard words will not do it; but the Secretaries of State who can undertake a jingle of hard cash.

Those who recently provoked the makers' dispute in Melbourne probably not foresee the consequences of it which now coming into view. Other persons and from time to time they have said should great combinations of labour be free they would certainly be met with correspondingly large combinations of capital. This now an immediate prospect that this affair will be witnessed on an unprecedented scale. The history of this movement is brief but striking. Operatives in certain factories deemed themselves aggrieved and went out on strike, and the money to a very many days of it are unable to a man who is idle. Men on and their families must live; and therefore if a trade involved in a struggle to support its own members, other trades be asked to assist. Again, if those given city or colony cannot do what is useful, other colonies must be appealed to. This is the natural order of things. This is exactly what has happened. The bootmakers of Melbourne have appealed to all the crafts of Sydney, and to their case remain unsettled much longer it may be necessary for them to appeal to a still wider constituency. This no reason why they should not, if it is recognised at all. Once admit the principle and no limits can be set to its application. There would be no inconsistency in appeal for help to all trades and labour unions of the world. The justice or injustice of the cause has nothing to do with the right of appeal and the obligation to respond. The naturally inclined affirm their cause just, and all co-operating organisations accept the conclusion. This is one of the awkward features of the case. Englishmen want to resist taxation which does not represent, and under ordinary circumstances they would offer a stout resistance. But trades and labour unions, to conserve principle of mutual aid, may have to render one of the dearest principles in the dependence and liberty of British subjects now appears that since for the goose was for the gander. Operatives are making trial one of strength. They, with their forces, threaten to do so strong for boot manufacturers, and left to themselves it is possible that the latter a trial of strength would be made. If the party now assailed can be made yield, not to reason but to force, any class of manufacturers may be squeezed out of existence at some future time. A juncture the instinct of fair play, and thought that no one can tell whose turn comes next, have called out manufacturers all trades. An enthusiastic meeting of persons, promising to band together to for the rights of capital, is significant and suggestive. This union, like of operatives, may be carried beyond colony at present concerned: it may be extended through the Continent, and all industries; and no one can object. Those who have money have the same to band together for mutual protection of those whose wealth is in their strength. Here, then, are the beginnings of a new state of things. Are we prepared to meet it? Is it a good thing, and is it wise that it should be considered, and is it a good thing, by all means, let it quickly; if it is not, it is worse than to provoke it.

In coming to a decision on these points have to consider what will be the normal state of things, and the normal consequences of the order of things. Should the present state
